International Risk Disclosure Statement

The risks associated with investment in international securities are significantly different from those associated with ASX listed securities. You should make sure that you have sufficient experience as an investor to invest in international securities.

This Risk Disclosure Statement should be read in conjunction with Shaw's Financial Services Guide (FSG). Its purpose is to explain some, but not all of the associated risks with investment in international securities. It should not be relied upon as a complete explanation of the risks involved and you should contact your professional adviser (including your taxation adviser) before making a decision to invest in international securities.

Political and Regulatory Risk

Political risk and regulatory risk in the relevant country will invariably affect the trading conditions, the value of your international securities and your ability to transact international securities. The political risk you might be exposed to can come from sudden changes in laws and regulations which cannot be anticipated. Further, regulatory risk can arise where the relevant requirements of the corporate regulator, or exchange, are lower than those of their Australian equivalents. Securities traded on such a foreign market may be susceptible to either or both high volatility and poor liquidity.

Taxation

Tax legislation in foreign jurisdictions may significantly vary from that in Australia. As a result, there may be different taxation implications for your transactions when compared with your transactions in ASX listed securities. Shaw does not provide taxation advice. Before making an investment in international securities, you should obtain professional taxation advice.

Foreign Currency Risk

Your international securities will be denominated in a currency other than Australian dollars. When purchasing or holding international securities you must have a sound understanding of the risks associated with foreign currency exchange movements. Due to market forces, if, for instance, the Australian dollar rises against the currency in which your international securities are denominated, the value of your international securities will fall. Adverse foreign exchange rate movements can more than offset security price gains.

International Custodian

Your international holdings will be held in custody of an International Custodian. Securities in the custody of an International Custodian may be subject to risk arising from changes to the political, legal, regulatory or commercial environment of the country of the International Custodian or international stock exchange. Shaw may have little influence on the choice of custodian and the terms of their engagement, which will generally be customary to the jurisdiction in which they are located. As a result, Shaw shall not be liable for any losses incurred by you by reason of any act, omission, fraud or negligence of any International Custodian in relation to the holding of or dealing with your international securities.

In Summary

By signing the International Account Agreement you:

- a) acknowledge that investing in international securities carries risks which you understand and accept, including but not limited to:
 - i) gains in the value of your international securities in the currency in which they are denominated can be more than offset by adverse foreign exchange movements;
 - ii) taxation implications can be different from investing in Australian securities and may vary depending on your individual circumstances;
 - iii) price movements on international security and currency exchanges can be extremely volatile;
- b) accept all risks associated with investing in international securities and the holding of your international securities by international custodians;
- c) agree that while Shaw may provide advice regarding an investment in international securities, that this advice will not include taxation or social security advice.

3. Information about our relationship with you

Pershing provides your Broker directly with a range of services under a clearing arrangement. Under this clearing arrangement, your Broker has set up a separate securities account for each of its clients (including you), and we provide custodial and depository services to those clients, as disclosed in this FSG.

4. What financial services are we authorised to provide to you?

We are relevantly authorised under our AFSL to provide you with custodial and depository services. We are not authorised to provide these services for financial products held through investor directed portfolio services, nor are we authorised to provide financial product advice, or deal in margin lending facilities to retail clients. We are also not authorised to provide personal financial product advice to retail clients under our AFSL.

5. Who do we act for when we provide financial services?

We act for you in providing the custodial and depository services to you. As noted above, we may provide other services to your Broker.

6. How can you give us instructions?

To provide instructions to us in relation to the custodial and depository services, you must contact your Broker (and not Pershing directly). For further details, see our Rule 4311 Disclosure Statement, which is available in the material you received following the opening of your account with us.

7. What relationships do we, and our related bodies corporate, have with product issuers which might reasonably be expected to be capable of influencing us when providing the financial services?

Pershing and its related bodies corporate may, as part of Pershing's overall business arrangements, enter into relationships with product issuers, such as mutual funds, under which Pershing may receive reimbursement for the cost of producing such things as trade confirmations, statements, and tax reports to you, or other benefits as a result of making these products or services available through your Broker. Given the nature and limited range of the financial services Pershing is providing on behalf of your account, Pershing does not consider that these relationships could reasonably be expected to have any influence on the way it provides these particular services.

However, to assist you in considering this question, information about payment for order flow, fees received from related bodies corporate and other matters that could be considered a conflict are disclosed in the Pershing LLC Disclosure Statement (which has been sent to you separately and can be found at: <http://www.pershing.com/disclosurestatement.html>).

Additional disclosure information is also available at http://www.pershing.com/business_continuity.html.

8. How are we remunerated? How are these fees, commissions or other benefits calculated?

Fees for custodial and depository services that we provide to you

Under the clearing arrangement between us and your Broker, your Broker pays us a fee for providing you with the custodial and depository services. Your Broker decides the extent to which it passes on this fee to you. Information concerning the fees passed onto you may be obtained from your Broker.

Fees for other services provided to your Broker under the clearing arrangement

You should also be aware that certain fees relating to the services that we provide to your Broker under the clearing arrangement, in addition to the custodial services that we provide to you, may, as agreed between us and your Broker, be charged directly to your account by your Broker and disclosed to you in the Broker's Fee Schedule.

Further information

For further details about these fees, see the Fee

Schedule provided by your Broker. You may also, within a reasonable time after being given the FSG and before any financial service set out in this FSG is provided to you, contact us using the contact details set out in section 2 above for further details.

10. How are our representatives remunerated?

They may also be entitled to a bonus or other employment benefit based upon performance and achievement of various objectives by both the employee and Pershing.

At Pershing, we recognize the importance of protecting your privacy and have policies in place to maintain the confidentiality and security of any of your personal information collected and to ensure that it is handled in accordance with the requirements of the Privacy Act (Cth) 1988. A copy of our privacy policies can be obtained by visiting the Pershing LLC website at:

<https://www.pershing.com/privacy-policy>

If you have any questions about privacy, please contact our Privacy Officer using the contact details in section 2 above.

15. What kind of compensation arrangements do we have in place?

Pershing holds professional indemnity insurance as required under section 912B of the Corporations Act.

16. How does Pershing hold client money?

Client money is money that is paid by, or on behalf of, a client to the AFSL holder in connection with a financial service provided to, or a financial product held by, the client. Client money is generally required to be held by an AFSL holder in accordance with the requirements set out in section 981B of the Corporations Act.

However, Pershing has obtained an exemption from the need to comply with the requirements of section 981B, from the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC), on condition that:

- it holds any client money in accounts in the name of Pershing at a bank incorporated in the United States;

- the bank is regulated by the Federal Reserve Board; and
- in relation to the client money, Pershing is subject to regulation by the United States Securities and Exchange Commission and under the Securities Investor Protection Act of 1970.

Pershing will hold your money this way, rather than in accordance with section 981B. However, Pershing is prohibited under U.S. law, from using the cash to finance its own investments.

Under the ASIC exemption, we are also required to provide you with the following information about our alternative arrangements.

Risks associated with holding money this way

One risk you will incur is that access to your cash may be interrupted in the event of Pershing's insolvency. As this money would be held in U.S. dollars, or other currency, you would also face exchange rate risk at the time payment may be made to you. The U.S. laws and regulations which govern how Pershing maintains custody of your cash differ from the laws and regulations to which other Australian financial services licensed dealers are subject. Your rights to recover your cash in the event of Pershing's insolvency may differ from the rights you would have in the event of our insolvency without Pershing's exemption from section 981B of the Corporations Act 2001.

Australian law

- If Pershing did not have an exemption from section 981B and breached that section, your right to recover your cash held by Pershing would be limited to the amount, if any, in any section 981B accounts and any other cash held by Pershing as part of its business.
- Any monies held in the section 981B account would be held on trust for all customers (see the next paragraph). Any other cash held by Pershing would be available to you as an unsecured creditor such that you would rank behind any secured creditors of Pershing or any other creditors ranking in priority to unsecured creditors.
- If Pershing became insolvent or ceased to be licensed (for example, because ASIC cancelled or suspended its licence), the money held in the section 981B account would be applied first to any person who paid the money to Pershing in error, secondly to any person who is insured by Pershing and thirdly to you. If there is not enough money in the account to pay all of Pershing's customers or clients, it would be paid out in proportion to each customer's or client's entitlement.

US Law

Although we will not hold client money in a section 981B account, our insurance arrangements and US law also provide various rights and remedies to our clients in the event of a default by us in relation to any client money it holds.

Federal investor protection schemes

The federal securities laws of the United States and FINRA which apply to Pershing also provide an extensive investor protection scheme that should ensure the availability of your securities and cash which are in Pershing's custody and your recovery of those securities and cash in the event of Pershing's insolvency.

SEC rules, for example, require Pershing to maintain minimum net capital. SEC rules also permit Pershing the use of your cash which we hold to assist you or other customers in financing customer investments. Those rules require Pershing to maintain sufficient cash reserves to satisfy any amounts it owes to customers and to make those funds available to you promptly.

Insurance coverage

Pershing is a member of the Securities Investor Protection Corporation (SIPC). As a result, securities in your account are protected up to USD$500,000 (of which USD$250,000 can be for claims for cash awaiting reinvestment). For details, please see www.sipc.org. In the event of Pershing's insolvency, you would have a priority claim to your money and securities held in custody by Pershing.

In the event of Pershing's insolvency, a U.S. bankruptcy court would appoint a SIPC trustee, who will notify you by mail of your rights to recover your assets under U.S. law and how to make a claim for those assets. More information on SIPC protection can be found at www.SIPC.org.

In addition to the SIPC coverage, Pershing has also obtained coverage in excess of SIPC limits from certain underwriters in Lloyd's insurance market and other commercial insurers. The excess of SIPC insurance program is valid for Pershing LLC accounts and is renewable annually. It provides the following protection for Pershing's global client assets:

- An aggregate loss limit of USD$1 billion for eligible securities-over all client accounts
- A per-client loss limit of USD$1.9 million for cash awaiting reinvestment-within the aggregate loss limit of USD$1 billion.¹

You should be aware that SIPC and the excess of SIPC insurance policy do not protect you against losses arising from market fluctuations.

However, access to this policy would only arise if Pershing failed financially and client assets for covered accounts, as set forth on SIPC's website, cannot be located due to theft, misplacement, destruction, burglary, robbery, embezzlement, abstraction, failure to obtain or maintain possession or control of client securities, or to maintain the special reserve bank account required by applicable rules. More information about the excess insurance can be found at http://www.pershing.com/strength_stability.html

17. FSG does not constitute advice

The information presented in this FSG does not constitute financial product advice, legal advice and/or tax advice and, as such, it does not take into account the financial objectives, situation or needs of the recipient of, or any other person using the information presented in, this FSG. We will not provide you with a Statement of Advice.

No part of this FSG shall be construed as creating a fiduciary, financial or other advisory relationship between Pershing and the recipient of, or any other person using the information in, this FSG.

Pershing recommends that you seek your own financial, legal and/or tax advice (as appropriate) before obtaining any financial services from us.

¹ Pershing may decide not to renew the excess of SIPC insurance program in any year. If Pershing does not renew the program, these protections will not apply. You may obtain details of the status of the program from your Broker.
